

AWARD OFFERED

The Dixie Annette Award of $10,000 (minimum) is being offered for the development of a cure for schizophrenia. The award is administered by the American Schizophrenia Association.

Description of patients. The American Psychiatric Association's definition and criteria for the diagnosis of schizophrenia shall apply. Supporting psychometric or biochemical evidence, or both, may be required. The diagnosis must be acceptable to the Association Board of Trustees.

General requirements. The cure (complete absence of schizophrenic symptoms) must be accomplished within one year of initiation of treatment and must be maintained for five years without remission from the date on which classification was assigned. Any and all treatment methods may be applied and, if necessary, be continued throughout the required five year cure period.

The treatment method must be effective in 90 percent of a minimum sample of 50 consecutively selected schizophrenic patients.

All clinical data must be presented to the Association Trustees, along with authorization to examine the patients.

The sample and treatment procedure must be described in a manner that will permit replication by an investigator(s) whom the Association will appoint.

Trustees of the Association are not eligible for the award.
